It is really too bad the way the time of the Legislature is being dawdled away without any business of importance being disposed of. Forty-five days of the ses sion have already elapsed since the House met, and yet the real work of the session has scarcely more than been entered upon. Day after day is frittered away in discussions on subjects of the most trivial nature, to the almost entire neglect of those weightier matters of le-gislation which the real interests of the country demand. To the observant spectator it would appear as if certain members of the House deemed it an imperative duty not to permit a single motion The Very Best Class of Custem Boots & to pass, however unimportant, or an act be performed, without being subjected to a lengthy debate, and the iteration and reiteration of their peculiar views upon it. If those gentlemen were only content with once having aired their eloquence on such occasions, the House might with a degree of complacency endure being bored with their displays of oratory; but when they to an almost incessant repetition of Corporation of the City of Victoria. blatant nonsense on every trivial matter, it becomes almost unendurable. # The Death of Louis Mapoleon.

Thus passed away a man whose character has ever been a riddle, and whose life has athas ever been a riddle, and whose life has a's forded a most striking example of the romance of reality. Individuality of greatness was just as indefibly stamped upon him as upon his unce, for though the man of Marengo surpassed him and all others as a soldier, he fell fartiefov him as a diplomatist. How singular are the mutations of time! The one perishing in an English colony, crying. "Perfide Albion!" while the other found as asylum from a murderous mob upon the very soil where reposed the ashes of the Iron Duke, who trampled down the imperial eagles at Waterleo. While his uncle was master of the art of war, the nephew showed himself a believe in the arts of peace. Under his farresing asspices, France was daily advancing in her mere towards industrial supremacy, and the Exposition Industriel of 1866 was the crowning layer, of his ambitions life. All France was being stimulated into new vitality by his genius. Look at Paris, how he reconst ut dher and builther boul-var's anew in a style of splendor that won the applause of an admiring world. Go to Cherbourg and behold her dockyard, a masterpiece of engineering that has never been surpassed. Next cross the Mediterranean, and see where his master brain had plotted the great task of the last half of our century—the Suez Canal—while the skill of de Lesseps brought it to a practical completion. The great mistake of his lifetime was his futile attempt to establish imperial government on the Western Continent, and his treachery to Maximilian of Hapsburg is the darkest stain upon his escutcheon. But "we are come to bury Cæsar" indeed, for with him dies the power of the Latin race. Let us not criticise him harsbly, for no man who not criticise him barsbly, for no man who lives in this generation can do him justice. He has passed from earth and stands in the dread presence of the Great King before whom even Emperors must bow. He was the best friend that France ever had, and it will not require the lapse of another decade for the land of his birth to vindicate his memory and defend the honor of his more than illus-

The Daily Standard Monday. Pebruary 3, 1873. How Honest John Disregards Truth. "Honest John" feels sore, very sore, at not being in the Ministry; and if he had been put in, he would never have been re-elected. Feeling sadly chopfallen, he now, as editor of the Colonist, has undertaken to sow broadcast all kinds of misrepresentations against Mr. DeCosmos, as well as the other members Mr. Decosmos, as their supporters in of the Government, and their supporters in the House. So "Honest John" yesterday got off several articles manufactured to his and Mr. Humphreys' taste, to the great disgast of sensible people. We do not intend to follow his utterances in detail: but briefly refute a few misstatements. He says that Hamphreys' Constitution Amendment bill was a grand measure of reform. But strange to say, that in a full House of twenty five, including the Speaker, twenty-one voted against it as not adapted to the country; and three, Messry. Humphreys, Bunster, and their follower, Mr. Robson voted for it. Nothing more need be said then en that point. Next Mr. DeCo-mos is charged with baving had a nice little speculation in view, when he stood out, in 1865, against the Government, breaking faith with the purchasers of lands sold for taxes. Now this statement of Honat John" is literally without color of foundation, and we defy him to show where, when, how, or with whom, Mr. DeCosmos was interested financially, directly or indirectly, for his own use, or the benefit of his friends, to the extent of a penny in the matter of the tax sales. So that whopper is silenced. Then the Sentinel's utterances about the "Constitution Amendment" is distorted and misrepresented, too. Mr. Booth, too. gets a slap, because he has given notice of an amendment to the Standing Orders, so as to mickly and well, the same as they do in the United States Congress and State Legislatures, and thus make members confine them-selves to the work for which the public pay them their per diem and mileage, instead of allowing a few blatherskites of no standing. and with less principle, to waste the time of the House, and delay the business of the country. Married Women's Rights Bill.

Concluded. It may be urged that I presuppose all women to be bad, all capable of taking advantage of the power the law would thus unwisely place in their bands, I would simply say that I do not suppose that there would be any, more women who would take drantage of the proposed new law, than there are men who now take advantage of the

What I do contend is, that there would be far more men to resent the operation of the new law than there are women who now suffer evil, which this law seeks to remedy. Under the old order of things, cases of in justice to women are, fortunately, few and far between, and in such cases the poor woman quietly bears the evils rather than cause a rupture in her family, while with the new law in force—the man unfairly, unjustly dealt with would -sure as fate-rebel against

This must arise from one of two causes; either their mothers and sisters have failed to impress them with sure, and from one end of the Province to the other, all well thinking men and women will condemn it and call for its repeal—unless the Governor's assent be withheld—which is speculation, or squandered in modes still

I have carefully read all that has been urged in Parliament or written in the papers against the passage of such a law, and in every instance the writer or speaker seemed to proceed upon the assumption that women are not naturally as good or honest as men— that they are inferior, and should be subor-digute—and that all that is necessary to excire in them the manifestation of the worst well being and happiness; but that women have little or no love for their hurbands and families, and should they be entrusted with tytton, situate on the road to delegate the road to Lytron Mill, is turned into the best flour in temale nature, is reported to have expressed fears that the passage of the bill would develop every woman in the Province into a Madame Duplessis or Lucretia Borgia, and
